

Friday, October 25, 1968

Cabazon Casino Not Sold

CABAZON — Present owners of El Cid, the new casino at the corner of Main and Broadway, have no intention of selling at this time.

This was the word from co-owners of the new casino, Frank Barmise and Ed Roban.

Councilman Thomas DeLuca informed the Record-Gazette that he had not intended to give the impression at the last City Council meeting that a change of owners was pending at El Cid.

"That was a misconception," DeLuca said. "I simply wanted to determine if the city license on the casino was transferable in case a change of ownership should ever occur. I was seeking to void loopholes before they occurred."

DeLuca said the fact that persons were interested in buying El Cid had brought the matter up.

DeLuca asked city attorney Carl Rimbaugh if new owners would have to put up an additional $25,000 or if the license covering the casino could be transferred.

Rimbaugh said that the license could not be transferred, but the members of the corporation could change, allowing new owners to take over without posting the sum for a license. He said the transfer could only take place with approval of the council.

"In other words," DeLuca pointed out, "the City Council could approve new owners and by-pass the $25,000 license payment. I feel it's up to the city to create a casino license that's not transferable."

*****

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—One of two escaped convicts who broke out of the Tulare County Jail by fashioning a mock gun from a bar of soap was captured early today. Sheriff's detectives took Lewis D. Fritz, 36, into custody after they saw him walking alongside Eastern Avenue in suburban Bell Gardens. Fritz was unarmed and offered no resistance, a sheriff's office spokesman said.

Clipped By:

kbarnese

Aug 3, 2026